

History of the Tarnagulla Colonial Bank

I have been researching the history of the Tarnagulla Colonial Bank. The impressive brick building is located on the corner of King Street and is across from the unique and colourful Matilda's Vintage Shop. The building has been seen and admired by many tourists. The building is a tourist attraction but is owned as a private residence.

The bank is a large building made of brick and has been painted a yellow colour. The building was originally a bank.

The bank looks the same as it used to look because no one has made any renovations and no one has painted it.

The building has changed because more people moved to other towns and suburbs so they decided to close it down in 1942.

I chose this building because it has an interesting history and because it has been around for over 100 years. I learnt that the building was closed down in 1942 because I thought it closed down later.
