

How a flour mill became a police station

By jazmin w

Grade 4

I have been researching the history of Tarnagulla's Police Station and have discovered some interesting facts about its history. The station is opposite Victoria Park and is on the corner of King Street and Commercial Road in Tarnagulla. The police station used to be a flour mill but this was closed in the 1920s.

The police station is made of brick and has navy blue and white checkers on the windows. It has a glass door to see out of and has a narrow path leading up to the door. The police station is an important building in the town now because the police help to keep the town of Tarnagulla safe and secure.

The flour mill had tall chimney and two small sheds. I found information about the flour mill on www.tarnagulla.org.

The flour mill was closed because one of the boilers exploded and three people were injured and one person died. The flour mill was then moved to Mildura because there was more people living there, so more people could work in the flour mill.

I wanted to research the history the police station because my friend lives in it. People should come to Tarnagulla because it a lovely and caring town.

